CLAUDINE IN MIX-UP

The steamer Claudine on her arrival from Maui ports yesterday morning got mixed up with the mid-channel buoy and, as a result, had to send her passengers and mail ashore in boats. Captain Parker, of the Claudine, places the blame for the accident on the dredger which is at present working in the channel.

Parker says that he gave the usual warning of four whistles for the dredger people to get clear. He then went ahead slowly as it was quite dark. When the Claudine was close to the dredger the tender signalled for the steamer to pass to leeward of her. There were no lights on the dredger visible to the Claudine and the position left so little room for maneuvering that the Claudine would have run down the tender had she obeyed the signal.

To avoid this, the Claudine backed, running her stern right into the mid-channel buoy. Parker immediately gave the full-stop bell which was promptly obeyed. Nevertheless the propeller blade wrapped a part of the buoy chain around it and also jerked up the buoy anchor.

The Claudine anchored and sent her passengers ashore in boats. Later on the Fearless towed the Claudine into port. The buoy chain and anchor were still attached to the steamer's propeller.
